FRIDAY, JUNE 25, 1909.

The railroads of the country have spent $30,000,000 since January 1, for new car equipment.

In view of the recent achievements in Venezuela and the benevolent interest of the United States therein, this would seem to be hardly the time for any one in this country to organize or assist a filibustering expedition against that country.

President Taft's special message to Congress presents so forcibly the reasons on which he bases his advocacy of a tax on the net earnings of corporations that he who runs may read, and we venture the opinion that no Speaker or Representative will receive any severe condemnation from his constituents, regardless of the party to which they may belong, who casts his vote for that amendment to the tariff bill. That the enactment of this tax constitutes a stride in the economic progress of the nation, not second to the enactment of the Sherman anti-trust law, is the view entertained by more than one statesman whose opinion is worthy of the respect of every thoughtful and patriotic citizen.

If reports from Washington are correct, Secretary Nagel expects to revolutionize the Department of Commerce and Labor. He has shown, already, a decided tendency to know all about the things for which he is responsible as an officer of the government, and he has now set in motion the machinery for a thorough investigation of every bureau in his department. The resignation of Mr. North as Director of the Census is evidence of the fact that political influence will avail nothing where incompetence is proven, and those clerks, if there be such, who are more interested in watching the clock than in the conscientious performance of their duties had better take heed while they may. Mr. Nagel's plan to enforce efficiency and economy in the department under his control is consonant with the policy of the present administration and expressed by President Taft to his Cabinet almost immediately following his inauguration.

Announcement is just made of another concession to the views of President Taft by the Senate leaders in their agreement to waive the time limit which they had determined to attach to Mr. Taft's proposition of a two per cent. tax on the net earnings of corporations. Evidently the members of the Senate are beginning to appreciate that they have in the White House a politician of more than ordinary ability. He has already demonstrated a skill in the game of economic politics of no mean order in the mastery with which he has handled the tariff legislation. While giving no encouragement to the "insurgents", Mr. Taft has placed no obstacle in their way; avoiding any criticism of the press that he was exceeding his constitutional prerogatives, his attitude has encouraged the press to criticize the Senate tariff bill as producing too little revenue; and finally, biding his time, the President has waited until the Senate leaders were obliged to go to him for assistance to defeat the income tax, when he adroitly guides them into a position where their only recourse is to enact a substitute which is but a degree less objectionable to many of them than the Cummins-Bailey proposition. Whether President Taft will play an equally skillful game in obtaining the enactment of other measures for which he is understood to stand remains to be seen. It is a safe prediction that he will, and that he will prove possibly even more successful in obtaining legislation from Congress than his predecessor. The difference between the two is in method, and not in determination nor skill.

LOOKING FORWARD.

The democrat press of the state has been having considerable trouble in finding a candidate to run for governor on the republican ticket. There is really no reason why the democrats should worry themselves about this matter because it is not up to them to make the selection. Of course, they would like to see the weakest possible candidate placed in nomination by the republicans so that there would be no doubt as to Governor Harmon's re-election a year from now.

Republicans will find no trouble in getting a nominee for governor who can beat Governor Harmon. The present democratic governor is getting into many partisan snarls and tangles and is showing himself to be a democratic governor instead of governor for all the people, all of which is making him bitter political enemies.

The names of a dozen men have already been mentioned as possibilities for the republican nomination and there is no doubt that there will be many more before the convention is called next year. There will be plenty of issues on which to meet Governor Harmon in his candidacy for re-election. In a state overwhelmingly republican there is no doubt but that under normal conditions a republican will be elected.

The taxation campaign inaugurated by the Ohio State Board of Commerce has reached the leaders of both parties and it looks as if the subject of taxation would be the paramount one in the gubernatorial campaign next year. The State Board of Commerce is the one organization that has a definite proposition and that one is to reduce the tax rate and increase tax values proportionately. Each member of the legislative tax commission, consisting of senators Clevenger and Patterson, republicans, Senator Alsford, democrat, will have a distinct and separate theory of taxation to present to the legislature next winter. The commission was appointed to devise ways and means for increasing state revenues, now threatened by heavy expenditures and decreasing incomes. Senator Clevenger has already declared that he will favor an income tax. Senator Alsford is not wholly in accord with his colleagues on this proposition, but says he will have an entirely different suggestion to make to the general assembly. He said that he is not willing to have his ideas made public, but believes they will lessen the tax burden, if adopted, and at the same time increase the state revenues. Senator Patterson is said to have a still different suggestion in his investigations.

The commission will have a meeting probably late in June to compare notes and exchange ideas. It is possible that they may shape their ideas so as to embody them more or less completely in a single report to the legislature.

"VENI, VIDI, VICI"

With Apologies to Caesar and the Roman Senate.

No the above is not a warning from the black hand, but translated reads, "I come, I saw, I conquered," and is the motto which has been adopted by the business men of the east side of Main street since Wednesday afternoon when they met the business men of the west side in a game of ball to decide who were entitled to the championship and who should furnish the supper for the entire galaxy of base ball stars.

The morning dawned propitious for the affair and continued so until shortly after the noon hour, when it began to rain and each faction accused the other of having supplicated, Divine Providence to interfere in their behalf to keep them from defeat. But every cloud has a silver lining and the sun soon shone forth and the gladiators hid themselves to the arena to clash in deadly combat.

Art Williams was selected to act as master of ceremonies and many a sigh of regret was heard from the vast throng as he was seen to fearlessly advance to the center of the field, ready to sacrifice himself in the cause of glory. A breath of relief spread over the audience when his sonorous voice proclaimed the fact that the game was on and the awful suspense and uncertainty was drowned in the excitement of the waging conflict.

Herman Star, he of the tonsorial proclivities, essayed to take up the position on the firing line for the east side. He looked very stunning clothed in full uniform, which showed off the attractions of his manly form to the best advantage. Our staff photographer was fortunate enough to induce him to pose for his picture, from which we have produced the following cut. It is a fairly good likeness, owing to the haste in which it was prepared.

Herman, From Latest Photograph.

The West Siders seemed to take kindly to his offerings and he shortly retired to be replaced by Bert Gertig, who runs the picture show on the east side of the street, which qualified him to enter the conflict. He may have other qualifications to entitle him to be classed with ball players, but we failed to note them. He very modestly refused to pose for his picture but we secured the following snap-shot of him while on his way to the grounds, which we produce without his knowledge or consent.

Gertig, caught unawares.

He also failed to last and Fred Rossbach was called in to finish the conflict, which he did very credibly, and with him rests the real glory of the victory, for he succeeded in holding the enemy down and it was his three-base hit that tied the score and he crossed the plate a moment later with the run that won the game.

On the other hand, it devolved on Morris Cook to do all the twirling for the west side and he stuck to it manfully through the entire game and is deserving of much credit. Be it said, he had his opponents beaten until the closing rounds, when exhausted nature gave way and he began to weaken and the East Siders took advantage of the fact and forged to the front. Had there been some one to have afforded him a short respite it is our candid opinion that the result would have been different.

It would be useless to attempt to tell of all the stellar plays that were made—or errors either—but the game was replete with hair-raising stunts and no spectator or subject to heart failure had any business at the grounds. First one side would gain the advantage only to be supplanted by the other until the umpire declared the contest over and the result of the last ball showed the East Siders were victorious by the overwhelming majority of one—the score being 12 to 11.

The West Siders took their defeat very gracefully and done the part of Mine Host by furnishing a "feed" for victors and vanquished at Hotel Bradford.

Caught From the Press Box.

F. E. Bowers played short so that he might be handy to supply the umpire with legal advice when necessary.

The balls served up by Cook to Braoheld must have looked to him to be about the size of the biscuit he hands out at his popular hostelry, judging from his inability to hit.

prints made by Southworth when he succeeded in going from the home plate to second on a foul ball that went over the backstop. By actual count he hit the dirt just five times and spectators claim that but for interference of the second baseman he would have succeeded in making a home run. It was a grand effort.

Marshal Schaumloeffel was on the ground for the purpose of protecting the umpire and quelling any riot that might be started by the spectators or players.

And the remarkable part of it is that Williams survives to tell the tale.

It is unnecessary for us to explain to you the identity of the subject of this sketch as it will be readily recognized by all who attended the game as the portly gentleman who so ably officiated in left field for the East Siders after Braoheld had succumbed to the heat. You will notice it was excruciatingly hot for a man of his avoirdupois.

A. C. Fuller was out in full uniform and capered around second base with an elasticity that put some of the younger bloods to shame.

Ed Underhill and John Amon were taken seriously ill shortly before the game and were forced to witness the contest from a comfortable seat in the grandstand. The doctor diagnosed their case and pronounced it a severe attack of cold feet. They are convalescing at the present writing.

And the press didn't get an invitation to partake of that supper, either. Stingy things!

Sid Phillips showed some class in right field and it is evident that he is due for faster company another season.

It was simply a case of youth and strength pitted against science and old age and the strenuous pace proved too severe for old age.

—There is nothing doubtful about the value of advertising. It's as sure as any other business transaction. Reduced to its lowest terms, advertising is merely letting people know who you are, what you are, where you are, what you are doing and what you want them to do. The advertiser who keeps his business persistently before the people is the one who gets the business.
